

FLAYED HUSBAND AT BROADWAY SALE

Woman With Horsewhip
Interrupted Real Estate Auctions.

VICTIM BROKER MORRIS

He Was Ready to Bid in Her
Mortgaged House, but She Prevented Him.

A LONG whip, plied vigorously about the head and shoulders of a real estate dealer by an angry woman broke up yesterday morning's session at the real estate auction rooms at No. 111 Broadway.

The woman was Mrs. Anna Morris; the man, her common law husband, Francis Morris.

Mrs. Morris is attractive looking and apparently about forty years old. She says she first met her husband in Paris four years ago. She had considerable money, which she now declares Mr. Morris coveted and ultimately succeeded in getting.

Together they came to New York and bought the three-story brick house at No. 114 West Thirty-ninth street. There Mrs. Morris established a hotel and restaurant, while her husband opened a real estate office on the first floor.

Her Money for Payment.
The price of the house was $10,000. All of this amount that was ever paid was $3,500 out of Mrs. Morris's own pocket. A mortgage was given for the balance. The deed for the property was made jointly to Mr. and Mrs. Morris as husband and wife.

About a year ago they separated. Mrs. Morris says, because she discovered that her husband was swindling her. He then began, she alleges, a series of operations to have her share of the property transferred to him, telling his real estate friends that she was not his wife and consequently her title was no good.

Acting on this theory he sold her share for one dollar to a man named O'Hanlon, who tried to dispossess Mrs. Morris last July. For five days O'Hanlon's detectives besieged the house and wouldn't let her come out of her room. It had not been for kind-hearted neighbors who went to her down through the roof, she says she would have starved.

Three Piano from Window.
The detectives threw her piano out of a second-story window, and did many things that were hardly calculated to promote a kindly feeling between Mr. and Mrs. Morris. What Mr. Morris's lawyer calls "a compromise" was finally reached, by which he withdrew his real estate bid to sell the large rooms at No. 132 West Thirty-third street, and she continued her restaurant business at his former home.

In the course of the litigation which followed, she swore on the witness stand that ten years ago he had served a two years' sentence in Sing Sing for swindling, and he retaliated by charging her with perjury, and by spreading broadcast the statement that she was not his wife.

Mrs. Morris is unable to pay the interest on the mortgage. Mrs. Cox, who held it, had arranged to sell the little hotel at auction and foreclosure proceedings yesterday morning. Mr. Morris, with $5,000, was on hand to bid it in.

Woman Wields Her Whip.
Radiant in a shining silk hat, frock coat and checkered waistcoat, he stood smiling in front of an auctioneer's desk yesterday noon.

The $5,000 was in his pocket, and a confident smile played about his long, gray mustache.

The auctioneer was about to commence, No. 114 West Twenty-ninth street, when a shriek, a long heavy whip cracked, and the auctioneer, who had been looking at the property, turned and fled.

When he looked up to see where the blow came from, he saw the angry face of Mrs. Morris glowering at him.

"Ah! So you would drive me into the street, would you, villain!" she shrieked. "You, my husband, my wife, again I strike, and again I will do it."

Mrs. Morris doubled up his fist and struck for her, but a real estate broker standing behind him raised two wells on his face, then Mr. Morris broke away and ran. He dashed three times around the room with his wife close behind him, cracking her whip and crying:

"Stop! Stop! I want to kill you!" Benches were overturned. Prices of Riverside frontage were forgotten. Nobody says anything but Mr. and Mrs. Morris.

Husband and Wife Arrested.
Peter F. Meyer, Richard Croker's partner, who conducts the auction rooms, ran out of the office, crying "Police!"

Pale and hatless Mr. Morris dashed through the long hallway into Broadway, with Mrs. Morris in hot pursuit.

They ran into the arms of Policemen Neumeier, who took them both to Church street station, where Mrs. Morris was locked up for two hours.

Later in the Centre Street Court the husband refused to make a complaint against his wife, so Magistrate Daniel dismissed her. Up to a late hour last night Mr. Morris had not returned to his real estate office and could not be found.

Mrs. Morris, in the little hotel dining room, was jubilant.

"I don't own it any more," she said to a Journal reporter. "I'm all right. Mr. Morris is not my landlord, so I don't mind. I stopped him with my whip. Ha! It was a good whip. They were good blows I gave him."

NEWSPEARMAN THRASHES A BASEBALL MAGNATE.
Detroit, Mich., Oct. 19.—G. A. Vandenberg, owner of the Detroit American League Baseball Club, was thrashed today by "Bo" Neesham, sports editor of the Detroit Free Press, and official scorer for the Detroit club last spring.

Neesham went to the baseball office this noon and asked for his usual lunch. Vandenberg took his bicycle out to the curb and pedaled to meet him. Vandenberg in his hurry to get away and dodge the issue, fell from his seat as the result of a little meal from Neesham and went sailing in the mud.

He arose and hauled his 160 pounds upon the 130 pound newspaper man. After a short but decisive fight, Vandenberg turned and fled.

His prominent nose, broken and bleeding, and eyes were discolored, while his face and clothes were smeared with mud. Neesham escaped without a scratch.

ISABEL IRVING NOW W. H. THOMPSON'S WIFE

Isabel Irving.

The popular actress was married yesterday to William H. Thompson, the veteran actor.

Celebrated Actress Playing the Leading Role in "The Tyranny of Tears" Becomes the Bride of the Great Character Actor.

Isabelle Irving, the weeping wife in "The Tyranny of Tears," which has made a great success in the Empire Theatre, was married yesterday to William H. Thompson. The utmost secrecy was observed on the part of the witnesses, and the couple, until late last evening, hoped that the ceremony, which was privately performed in Jersey, might be passed unnoticed.

At the Park Avenue Hotel, however, Mr. Thompson blushingly acknowledged that he had been married in the forenoon, but that the marriage would in no way interfere with his wife's present engagement in the Empire. Mr. Thompson added that the engagement had been a long one, and that the marriage had been postponed owing to the death of Miss Irving's mother.

Mrs. Irving was born in Bridgeport and made her debut with Rosina Vokes in "The School Mistress" in 1887. For six years she was a member of Augustin Daly's company, playing with that organization in London and Paris. Resigning in March, 1894, she was promptly engaged by Daniel Frohman for the "Amazons." When Georgia Cayvan left the Lyceum Theatre, Miss Irving was promoted to the position of leading lady of the stock company, and appeared in "A Woman's Sin" and "The Case of the Rebellious Susan," her best performance probably being Princess Flavia in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

She has, however, made a decided hit as Mrs. Parbury in "The Tyranny of Tears." Miss Irving is a blond beauty of the fragile type, and is noted for her gowns.

W. H. Thompson is one of the most artistic character actors who has played in many parts and always played them well. He was seen last in the Scotch play "The Little Minister," and as Friar Laurence in Charles Frohman's production of "Romeo and Juliet," in which Maude Adams made an emphatic success as Juliet.

TRACED HUSBAND IN MORGUE ALBUM.

His Widow Finds It After Seven Years of Uncertainty.

A woman found in the album of the unidentified at the Morgue yesterday her husband's portrait. With a presentiment that it was there she had sought for it at regular hours, persistently, for three days.

He was Heinrich Delgentech, an Austrian political exile. He had been famous enough to frighten an empire; he was picked up unknown in the low tide of the Hudson River on November 10, 1892.

He came here with his wife twenty-two years ago. He was forty years of age, she twenty. He had a little money, a great deal of ability, the enthusiasm that gives to reformers perpetual youth. He worked well for a decade at various things. He was a farmer, an accountant, a salesman.

He became a drunkard. His wife, exasperated by the change in his temperament, went back to Austria, where her mother, ill, needed her. When she returned to her home here, six months afterward, it was a scene of desolation. The furniture, carpets and pictures had been sold. Delgentech was on the eve of being dispossessed and revelling still in dissipation.

Mrs. Delgentech went to work as a servant in the service of wealthy persons. She made no effort to learn where her husband was. She was happy at the thought that he might not be able to find her, if he tried. But in the years her love for him had been replaced by the pity that never dies in women.

And a trace of him in the houses of his acquaintances, in hospitals, in prisons. She reserved the records of the Morgue as a last resource, although a voice whispered to her that she was wasting her time. In the Morgue, however, she had been replaced by the pity that never dies in women.

She said these things quietly, without affectation of grief, to the physicians at Bellevue, who said that her name was Agnes Delgentech, and refused to tell the address of her employers. She is tall, dark-haired and well dressed.

Fair West End Republicans Discuss Local Politics.

OTHER SUBJECTS, TOO.

They Ignore Anti-Expansionists and Divide on the South African War.

"The last days of the registration, ladies, are here, the last days!"

It was not a call to the polls in Colorado or Nebraska. It was merely Mrs. Cornelia Robinson, president of the West End Woman's Republican Club, yesterday indirectly addressing the men.

"Each one of you has a duty to perform," she cried to their gentler halves. "Do it! Look upon this picture—a handsome man. See that he wins!"

High above her head Mrs. Robinson held a photograph of Mr. Armitage Matthews. "There are young girls in his district. To them let me say he is a bachelor—the first that ever ran for Alderman in the Twenty-first!"

"And there's Edward H. Fallows," cried Mrs. Clarence Burns, "son of Bishop Fallows. Turn out and work for him."

"We should use our effort for the Republican candidates in any event," cried the Chair. "If he's a good man so much the better!"

Mrs. Jane Pierce, as spokesman, lauded the re-nomination of Judge Barrett and smiled faintly upon Tammany.

"Even though he be a Tammany candidate," she cried, "he is a conspicuous evidence of the fact that there are men who recognize the value of honesty and integrity above partisanship. Let the City Club and Mr. Quigg decide which is most entitled to this exhibition of civic virtue!"

Mrs. Pierce declared the conflict between Tammany and the civil service amusing. She explained that Charles H. Knox, president of the Civil Service Commission, had presided at the Tammany County Convention when it dealt with what it called "Civil Service sham."

"Could any woman of intelligence," cried Mrs. Pierce, "be found who would thus publicly denounce a system established by the law of the State?"

Mrs. Knox went down on the minutes of yesterday's meeting as an "impudent denigrator."

Superintendent Maxwell's stand with regard to the Brooklyn schools was praised and the tenets of Mr. Bolton Hall's American League were dismissed as too puerile to discuss.

On the question of the South African war the house was divided.

"The English cause was the one we fought for," cried one enthusiast. "Taxation without representation!"

"If there were no gold and diamond mines the English wouldn't be there!" another declared.

Finally it was decided against the war: "No diamonds—no British."

WOMAN ACCUSES FORMER LANDLORD OF ARSON.

Has Him Arrested on the Charge of Burning Her Household Goods After Her Husband Died.

Mrs. Rosina Caffrey, sixty years old, whose husband died in St. Michael's Hospital, in Newark, two weeks ago, caused the arrest in that city yesterday of Herman Yahn, her former landlord, on a charge of arson.

Yahn owned a barn at No. 502 Eighth avenue, the upper part of which was occupied by Mrs. Caffrey and her husband as living apartments. Caffrey had a little black shop, and before his death his wife used to assist him at the forge.

When Caffrey was removed to the hospital, she called on Mrs. Caffrey for her furniture to remain in Yahn's barn. Late on Tuesday night Yahn's barn was discovered on fire. Yahn arrived at his home, but Mrs. Caffrey's goods were entirely consumed. Yahn was placed under $500 bail.

Mount Stumbles at a Fence and the Rider is Severely Bruised.

Henry Bull came a nasty cropper while hunting with the Meadowbrook hounds at Hempstead, L. I., yesterday. The fifth fence proved a Waterloo for the young man, and his mount was badly cut up. Mr. Bull sustained several contusions, but no bones were broken.

The hunt party started from Bull's Head and went through Glen Head to Wheatley, where there was a check near A. D. Morgan's place. From there the turn was to have led to Westbury, but the hounds caught the drag master before he had made his scheduled course. Mrs. James L. Parry, who was with the party, was the only woman in the saddle.

NEW SYNDICATE TO DID ON TUNNEL.

Composed of Some of the City's Wealthiest Men.

Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 19.—The members of the Commercial Congress considered Japan and the various means of improving our commerce with that enlightened island to-day.

Mr. Kimura, the Japanese Minister to this country, spoke briefly, saying the policy of Japan has always been and always will be that of peaceful expansion in the domain of commerce and industry.

S. Uchida, the Imperial Japanese Consul and Government Delegate, followed in an address on the "Commercial and Industrial Development of Japan."

"Now, speaking of the commerce between the United States and Japan," said Uchida, "I would like to call attention to the fact that the country should ever be open to our foreign trade. It was Americans who opened the door of our foreign trade to all other nations except the United States and the first treaty of Japan with the United States is the dawn of the commercial and industrial progress of modern Japan."

Kake Utsui, delegate from the Japanese Traders' Society, said: "A Pacific cable route is a complete system connecting America with Japan, China and Australia, and it would be enormously to the advantage of the United States to have such a cable. The fact that the Pacific cable would injure the interests of some of the cable companies is not a matter worthy of serious notice."

"The powers interested are the United States, England, Germany and France, Russia, China and Japan. A complete system of cables would require lines from the Pacific coast to Hawaii, thence to Yokohama via Manila; from Yokohama to Vladivostok, thence to Korea and the French island of Nemoa to Sydney."

At the afternoon session, Truxton Beal's address on "Trade in the Far East" was read by Mr. Fox, of Washington. Among other things Mr. Beal said:

"It is difficult to realize that a trade route to the Far East will be commercially more accessible to the United States than to any of the other great commercial nations. The United States could do no more effective work for the extension of the world's trade than to resolve that the country should ever remain commercially neutralized, and that its trade should be fair and open to all."

"For this purpose the strategic importance of the Philippines is so great that the United States should hold them with the most profound conviction of right if from that point of vantage she could ever have access to the trade of all."

Mr. Yamamoto, delegate from the Chamber of Commerce of Kobe, Japan, read a paper on "Future Trade in the Far East," which was rendered in English by an interpreter. The value of the imports of America in 1894, said Mr. Yamamoto, was two million and a half yen, and in 1898 it had increased to fifty millions.

"It has been evident," he continued, "that the part of our trade to the Far East and exports have not been competent. We want more ships of greater tonnage and better fitted out."

"I firmly believe the opening of the Nicaragua Canal will create a new era in our commercial relations."

Papers were read by Mr. Okada, of the Kumamoto Chamber of Commerce, Japan; E. Somerville Murray, of the Aden Chamber of Commerce, and R. Gandhi, of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Gandhi said the commerce of India and America ought to be larger. There is a large and increasing trade between the two countries. There should be direct commercial communication between the Orient and the Occident, and the sooner America built up her merchant marine the sooner she would be able to compete for the trade of India.

Fred H. Smith, of the Bridgton (N. J.) Board of Trade, offered a resolution declaring that the United States having acquired the Sandwich Islands and the Philippines, where is a large population of Chinese, it becomes necessary to modify the Chinese restriction act. In order to have a uniform law for the whole of the United States and Territories or possessions, and pending Congress "to pass an act modifying the Chinese restriction act, and granting to the Chinese the privileges of other countries, the said privileges to be in a manner to bring about a harmonious solution of the question of labor between the United States and China to the detriment of both countries, and the Chinese, guiding pauper labor and the criminal class."
